

RHODE ISLAND JUDICIARY

MEDIA GUIDE for Reporters

Justice Independence Honor

The Supreme Court is a court of last resort and is the final interpreter of state law. The Supreme Court has final jurisdiction over questions of law and equity, supervisory powers over other state courts, and general advisory responsibility to the Legislative and Executive branches of state government concerning the constitutionality of state laws. The Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, Frank J. Williams, serves as the executive head of the Rhode Island Judiciary.

INTRODUCTION

The Media Guide for Reporters is designed to provide a quick source of basic information for journalists covering the court system. To assist the news media in reporting legal proceedings, the Community Outreach and Public Relations Office, along with representatives from the media, the Rhode Island Bar Association, and the courts, prepared this booklet for journalists requiring up-to-date information regarding the judicial process and legal terminology.

The right to a fair and prompt trial and the right of freedom of the press are fundamental liberties guaranteed by the state and federal constitutions. These basic rights must be vigorously preserved and responsibly practiced according to the highest professional standards.

This guide can be supplemented with additional information from the Rhode Island Judiciary's website, www.ricourts.com.

Rules of Media Access

Since April 22, 1981, the Rhode Island Supreme Court has allowed television and still cameras to photograph most proceedings in state courts.

Under rules issued by the Supreme Court, a trial judge has the "sole and unreviewable discretion" to decide whether to allow the television or print media to photograph any court proceeding. Approval to photograph or broadcast a court proceeding must be obtained in advance from the trial judge.

It is presumed that all media personnel covering court proceedings have read and know the content of Supreme Court Rules, Article VII. Media Coverage of Judicial Proceedings. A summary of the rules is as follows:

Court Proceedings

Televising, photographing, or broadcasting is not allowed in courthouse corridors or other portions of the courthouse building. Televising, photographing, or broadcasting within the courtroom is also not allowed during recesses or at any other time when the trial judge is not present and presiding.

Cameras

Pursuant to Supreme Court Rules, Article VII, Canon 4, only one television camera, one still camera, and one audio sound system for radio will be allowed in any trial court proceeding. Pool camera arrangements should be made by the media.

Sound and Light Criteria

Only television photographic and audio equipment that does not produce distracting sound or light can be employed. No artificial lighting device of any kind can be used. Only still camera equipment which does not produce distracting sound or light can be used.

Movement During Proceedings

The television camera may be installed in, or removed from, the courtroom only when the court is not in session. In addition, such equipment must, at all times, be operated from a fixed position. Still photographers and broadcast media personnel cannot move about the courtroom while proceedings are in session, nor can they engage in any movement that attracts undue attention.

Location of Equipment and Personnel

Equipment and operating personnel must be located in, and coverage of the proceedings must take place from, an area or areas within the courtroom designated by the trial judge.

Audio

There can be no audio pickup or broadcast of conferences that occur between attorneys and their clients, between co-counsel, or between counsel and the trial judge held at the bench.

Photographing Jurors

Prospective jurors cannot be photographed during voir dire. Individual jurors cannot be photographed after empanelment without consent. Also, no close-up pictures may be taken of jurors.

Courtroom Access/Seating/Decorum

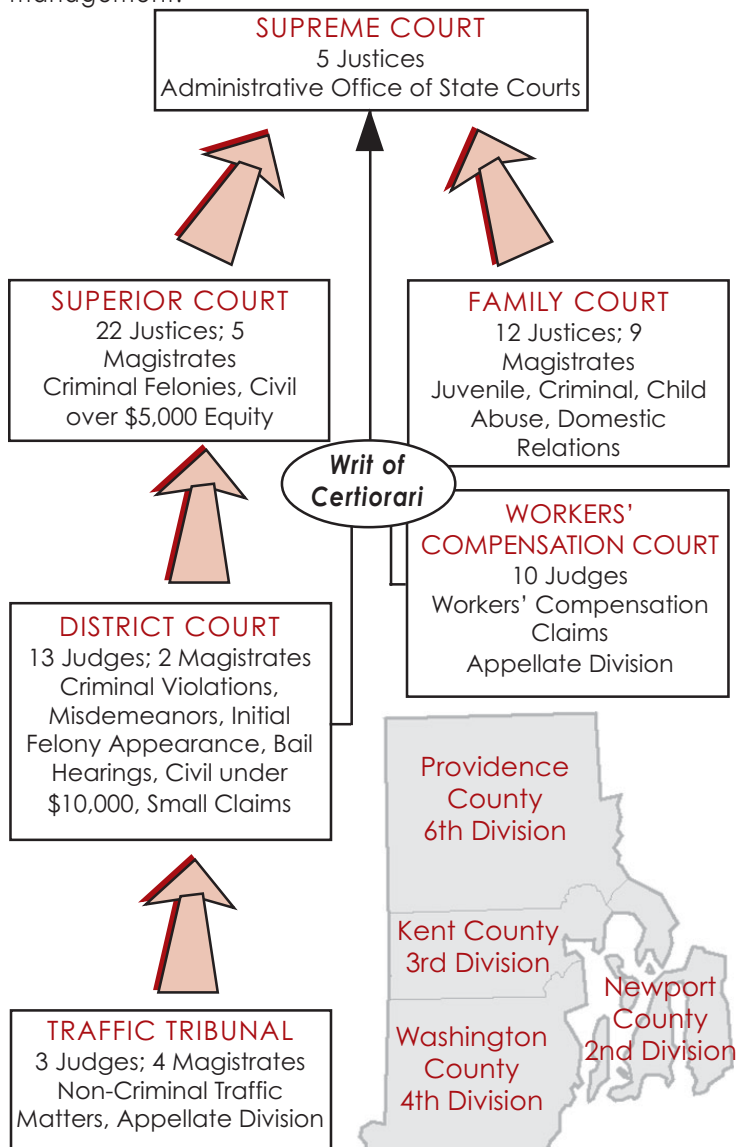

Unless otherwise specified by the Presiding Justice, seating in the courtroom for members of the press is on a first-come, first-served basis. Members of the media are requested to dress appropriately. Pagers and cell phones MUST be turned off or placed on vibrate mode.

Court Records

Most requests to see a court record need not be in writing; simply ask the clerk for the record by its case number or case name. Custodians of court records are the clerks in the respective courts. Criminal case history data and the criminal calendar are available online at www.ricourts.com.

COURT STRUCTURE

Rhode Island has six, state-funded courts constituting a unified court system. The Supreme Court is the court of last review. The Superior Court is the general trial court. The District, Family, and Workers' Compensation Courts and the Traffic Tribunal are trial courts of limited jurisdiction. The Chief Justice of the Supreme Court is the executive head of the judicial system and has authority over the judicial budget. The Chief Justice appoints a State Court Administrator and staff to handle budgetary and administrative tasks. Each individual court also has its own Presiding Justice or Chief Judge and Administrator to handle internal court management.

The Rhode Island Supreme Court sits in Providence at the Licht Judicial Complex. Family and Superior Court judges sit throughout the state at courthouses in Providence, Kent, Newport, and Washington Counties. The District Court sits throughout the state in the Second, Third, Fourth, and Sixth Divisions as shown above.

The Workers' Compensation Court sits in Providence at the Garrahy Judicial Complex. The Traffic Tribunal is located in Providence, and one judge travels on a weekly basis to cover the courtrooms at the Stedman Government Center and in Woonsocket.

JUDICIAL NOMINATIONS

To become a state judge under the current system in Rhode Island, one must apply to a nine-member Judicial Nominating Commission which then nominates three to five individuals to fill all court vacancies. The names are submitted to the Governor who then appoints someone from the list of commission-approved candidates. The Senate then must confirm the Governor's nominations for lower court judges. Both the Senate and House, sitting in separate sessions, must confirm the Governor's nominations for Supreme Court judges. The Judiciary is not part of the judicial nominating process.

Judges in Rhode Island have tenure for life, serve full-time, and are barred from practicing law while holding office. Judges can be removed from office for neglecting their duties or gross misconduct.

Court Structure

The Supreme Court consists of a Chief Justice and four Justices.

Responsibilities

The Supreme Court has final appellate jurisdiction over questions of law and equity, supervisory powers over other state courts, and general advisory responsibility to the legislative and the executive branches concerning constitutional issues. The Supreme Court is also responsible for regulating admission to the Rhode Island Bar and disciplining its members.

The Supreme Court has an administrative office that oversees all personnel matters, fiscal concerns, and purchasing functions for the entire state court system. The office also performs a wide range of managerial tasks, including the development and operation of automated information systems for all courts; long-range planning; the collection, analysis, and reporting of information on court caseloads and operations; the development and implementation of management improvement projects in specified areas; and the supervision of facilities.

Process

The Supreme Court generally sits en banc (with all five members) for the first full week of every month, except for the summer months, to hear oral arguments. During oral argument week, the court hears cases that are scheduled for each day, one after the other.

In full cases (also known as plenary cases) each side has thirty minutes to verbally argue its position. The side that prevailed in the lower court is referred to as the defendant. The side challenging the lower court decision, known as the plaintiff, presents its oral argument first. The plaintiff may reserve ten minutes for rebuttal.

Motions, which generally involve fewer legal issues than plenary cases, are argued by each side for ten minutes. The appellant does not have an opportunity to rebut.

Once oral arguments have concluded, the Justices begin the task of deciding the cases and writing opinions. This process usually takes four to six weeks. Intensive research, and, frequently, lengthy discussion precede the opinion writing process.

Between oral arguments and the rendering of opinions, the Justices meet in private conferences, closed even to their staffs, to discuss the cases and take preliminary votes on the outcome. One Justice is randomly assigned to write the opinion. The dissenting Justice or Justices, if any, may then draft dissenting opinions. Draft opinions are circulated privately among the justices and revisions are made until the Justices agree upon a final draft.

Decisions of the court are made public when the court files them with the Clerk's Office of the Supreme Court. The Clerk's Office then sends copies of the decision to the attorneys in the case and makes copies available to the public. Decisions are now electronically transferred to members of the media.

Appellate Mediation Program

The Supreme Court Appellate Mediation Program is an initiative of Chief Justice Frank J. Williams with the full support of other members of the Supreme Court bench - Justice Maureen McKenna Goldberg, Justice Francis X. Flaherty, Justice Paul A. Suttell, and Justice William P. Robinson III. Mediation is an alternative dispute resolution procedure that seeks to settle disagreements outside of the courtroom by means other than litigation.

Exploring mediation and other innovative methods of alternative dispute resolution has become a hallmark of Chief Justice Williams' tenure as he encourages litigants to resolve disputes without the expense, time, and contentiousness of trials. Studies indicate greater public satisfaction with mediated solutions because this process allows parties an opportunity to carefully examine their interests and needs, assess the risks of appeal, and determine whether they can reach a mutually satisfactory solution. Mediation also allows for more creative solutions as compared to the typical monetary or equitable relief awarded by a court decision.

Court Structure

The Presiding Justice of the Superior Court is the administrative judge of the court. The Presiding Justice has responsibility for establishing calendars, assigning judges, appointing a Superior Court Administrator, and making rules for the conduct of the court's business. The Presiding Justice is assisted by twenty-one Associate Justices as well as five Magistrates.

Responsibilities

Superior Court is the trial court of general jurisdiction in all felony proceedings, in civil matters where the amount in controversy exceeds $10,000, and in matters of equity. Jurisdiction is concurrent with the District Court as to civil matters with amounts at issue from $5,000 - $10,000. The Superior Court also hears appeals on civil and criminal cases from the District Court. Any appeal from a decision rendered in the Superior Court is taken directly to the Supreme Court.

In addition, the Superior Court administers the Court-Annexed Arbitration Program which accelerates the disposition of less complex civil cases. Also administered through the Superior Court is the annual "Settlement or Mediation Week," held in Providence in December each year during which civil cases may be resolved through mediation.

Other types of appeals and statutory proceedings, such as redevelopment, land condemnation, zoning appeals, and enforcement of arbitrator's awards, fall under the Superior Court jurisdiction.

Specialty Courts

Business Calendar

The framework of the Superior Court Business Calendar allows quick resolution of disputes and has been praised by Rhode Island corporations for cutting litigation costs and preserving an environment for creating and retaining jobs.

Confidence in an effective, efficient, and predictable process when claims are brought to the Superior Court Business Calendar serves as an incentive for businesses to stay in or relocate to Rhode Island. Both large and small businesses note that the Superior Court Business Calendar sends a message that Rhode Island is interested in crafting a climate that is attractive to prospective new businesses, as well as those already located in the state.

Drug Court

The mission of the Adult Drug Court is to meet the challenges of substance abuse in the criminal population by providing voluntary, intensive, judicially supervised treatment for non-violent drug offenders as an alternative to incarceration. The Drug Court's goals are: to reduce the prison population of drug offenders; to reduce substance abuse and crime rate; to reduce the court's criminal caseload; to reduce recidivism in the criminal population; and to reduce prison costs while addressing the concerns of the community by enhancing neighborhood protection and improving the quality of life for all Rhode Island citizens.

Gun Court

Rhode Island's specialized Gun Court is the first of its kind in the nation. This innovative program has reduced the time it takes to dispose of a case after filing from eight months to four months.

Criminal Process

Criminal prosecutions are brought by an indictment, criminal information, or a complaint. An indictment is a formal charge brought by a Grand Jury after hearing only the state's side of the case. Criminal information is similar to an indictment, except it is brought by the Attorney General rather than by a Grand Jury. A complaint is used in less serious criminal cases and is initiated either by a police department or by the Attorney General.

The defendant may admit to the charge by entering a plea of "guilty" or "nolo contendere" (no contest), which has the same effect as a plea of guilty. In either case, there is no trial and the judge may impose a sentence. The defendant may deny the charge by entering a plea of "not guilty."

When a plea of "not guilty" is entered, the defendant is entitled to a trial by jury of twelve people under the Rhode Island Constitution. If the defendant is financially unable to provide his or her own attorney, the defendant will be represented by a member of the Public Defender's Office or by a court appointed attorney. The defendant may also represent himself which is known as appearing "pro se."

The Criminal Trial Proceeds as Follows:

1. The Assistant Attorney General makes an opening statement outlining to the jury the evidence that will be introduced to prove the State's case. The defense has the option of giving an opening statement at that time, delaying it until the start of its case, or waiving the statement.
2. Prosecution: The prosecuting attorney then calls witnesses, one by one, in support of the charge. After direct examination of each witness is completed, the defense lawyer has a right to cross-examine the witness. The cross-examination may be followed by a redirect examination by the prosecutor. When the Attorney General has introduced all of its evidence, the prosecutor announces, "The state rests."

3. Defense: The defense attorney may, if the defendant wishes, introduce evidence. However, the defendant is not required to do so and may decide to merely say, "The defense rests." If the defendant does decide to testify or present any witnesses, the prosecutor may cross-examine each person and the defense attorney may follow that with redirect examination.
4. After the defense has rested its case, the Attorney General may introduce evidence in rebuttal explaining or contradicting evidence brought by the defense.
5. When both sides have completed their presentation of evidence, the defense lawyer delivers a final argument or summation to the jury. The prosecution follows with his or her summation.
6. The judge then charges the jury by explaining the law that the jurors are to apply to the facts of the case.
7. Before the jury deliberates, there is usually another step required to eliminate all members of the jury in excess of twelve. Following the judge's charge to the jury, a foreperson will be named by the judge.
8. The jury then retires to deliberate its verdict. The deliberations are carried out in the jury room without any intrusion from exterior sources.
9. Sentencing: The trial judge imposes the sentence. Sentencing benchmarks were developed for the Superior Court in 1981 and have been updated as recently as 1998. The benchmarks established a set of consistent sentencing standards thereby reducing the potential for sentencing disparity. While the benchmarks allow for judicial discretion, they also take into consideration the offense, the defendant's criminal history and method of conviction, and violation of previous probation. (A complete list of the benchmarks is available in the Superior Court section of the Judiciary's website at www.ricourts.com).

Civil Process

A civil case is one involving a dispute between two or more parties and ordinarily seeks to recover a certain sum of money. The party who brings the suit is the plaintiff. The party against whom the suit is brought is the defendant.

A jury of six (plus two alternates) is selected and sworn and the trial proceeds.

The Civil Case Proceeds as Follows:

CAUSE OF ACTION

- ✦ Dispute between (among) parties giving rise to a cause of action.

FILING

- ✦ Case (complaint) filed in Superior Court Clerk's Office.
- ✦ Case number is assigned by a clerk.

SERVICE

- ✦ Service of summons and complaint upon the defendant(s)

by a sheriff, constable, or any individual eighteen years of age or older who is not a party to the action.

ANSWER

- ✦ The defendant(s) must respond to the complaint (file an answer) within twenty days of date of service.
- ✦ If no answer is filed within twenty days, plaintiff may obtain a default judgment against the defendant for the amount claimed in the complaint.

DISCOVERY

- ✦ Process between the parties during which documents are exchanged, interrogatories and depositions are taken, and various motions are filed.

TRIAL

- ✦ The parties present evidence and witnesses to a judge and/or a jury.

ENTRY OF JUDGMENT

- ✦ The case is resolved either by agreement of the parties (stipulation enters), by court order, or by jury verdict.
- ✦ An order is entered by the judge disposing of the case.

APPEAL

- ✦ Either or both parties may appeal the case to a higher court.

ENFORCEMENT OF JUDGMENT (if necessary)

- ✦ If the defendant(s) does not comply as ordered, the plaintiff may apply to the court for the following:
 - ▶ Wage attachment;
 - ▶ Citation compelling the defendant(s) to appear in court; and
 - ▶ Body attachment may issue if the defendant(s) fails to appear.

Jury Process Petit Jury

The petit jury is the panel of twenty-five to thirty-two jurors from which fourteen jurors are selected for criminal trials (twelve plus two alternates) and from which eight are chosen for civil trials (six plus two alternates). Petit jurors serve for a two-day period in Providence/Bristol and Kent Counties, unless selected for a trial that may extend beyond two days. In Washington and Newport Counties, petit jurors serve for either one day or the duration of one trial.

Defendants in criminal cases and parties in most civil actions are entitled to a trial by jury. In deciding guilt or innocence, the jury must be unanimous on each charge. After the jury has returned with a verdict, either side may request that individual jurors be polled. In instances where the jury cannot reach a verdict, the jury will be considered "hung" and the case may be retried.

Jurors are not allowed to communicate on any subject with a lawyer, witness, or reporters while a case is on trial. Jurors should refuse to listen if any outsider tries to talk about a case on which he or she is sitting. There are no restrictions on the right of petit jurors to discuss a case after they have been discharged from service.

Jury Selection

Anyone who is a United States citizen, eighteen years old, and a resident of the State of Rhode Island can be selected for jury duty. The names of potential jurors are picked randomly from the state's voter registration list of Rhode Island licensed drivers, those with state issued identification cards, those who have filed state income tax returns, and those who have received unemployment compensation. Grand and petit jurors are chosen from the same pool of prospective jurors.

Prospective jurors report to a courthouse where they are questioned by a judge who, after being satisfied that they meet the statutory requirements, administers the oath.

In selecting a jury, judges and the parties' lawyers can question each potential juror to determine whether he or she is related to a party on either side; has an interest in the case; has formed or expressed an opinion about the case; or has a bias toward the case. The aim is to obtain a fair and impartial jury. This process is called voir dire. The law also permits counsel for each party to excuse a certain number of jurors without giving any reason. These are known as peremptory challenges. Other jurors are then drawn to replace those excused until a full jury is seated.

Grand Jury

A grand jury sits on either a countywide or statewide basis and consists of no more than twenty-three, and no less than thirteen people. In presenting a case before the grand jury, the State must set forth the facts related to the alleged offense. The person who is the target of the grand jury investigation is not normally allowed to testify.

After considering the evidence, the grand jurors may vote to issue an indictment, known as a "true bill," formally charging the suspect with a crime. The indictment is returned to a Superior Court judge in open court. If the grand jury is not convinced by the evidence, it may decide not to return an indictment and instead issue a "no true bill."

Court Structure

The Chief Judge is the administrative judge of the court and is responsible for Family Court initiatives, calendars, and making rules of conduct for the court's business. The Chief Judge is assisted by eleven Associate Justices, one General Magistrate, and eight Magistrates.

Responsibilities

Family Court is charged with assuring that children within its jurisdiction receive care, guidance, and control conducive to their welfare. Additionally, if children are removed from their parents, the court also seeks to secure care equivalent to that which their parents should have provided.

Consistent with these goals, the Family Court has jurisdiction to hear and determine all petitions for divorce, any motions in conjunction with divorce proceedings, and motions relating to the distribution of property, alimony, support, and custody of children. The court hears petitions for separate maintenance and complaints regarding support for parents and children.

The Family Court also has jurisdiction over matters relating to delinquent, wayward, dependent, neglected, abused, mentally deficient, or mentally disordered children. The court also has jurisdiction over adoptions, paternity proceedings, and other matters involving domestic relations and juveniles.

The Family Court also presides over criminal trials for adults accused of child abuse. In these cases a defendant may ask for a jury trial. Appeals from Family Court decisions are taken directly to the Supreme Court.

Juvenile Process

Charges and Arrest

A juvenile who commits an offense that would result in a felony indictment against an adult is charged with delinquency. The law designates a child as wayward if he or she runs away from home without good reason and habitually associates with dissolute, vicious, or immoral persons.

Waive to Superior Court

A child who is sixteen years or older and who is charged with murder, assault with intent to commit murder, or first degree sexual assault, will be waived into the Superior Court for trial upon motion of the Attorney General as long as a Family Court Associate Justice finds probable cause that the teen committed the offense.

Specialized Family Court Process

Juvenile Drug Court

To be admitted into the Drug Court program, a juvenile must meet certain eligibility criteria. The Drug Court targets juvenile offenders aged thirteen to seventeen who are charged with alcohol and/or drug offenses. Juveniles with a prior violent adjudication or a pending violent delinquent charge are not eligible for the program. A juvenile must also be highly motivated to change his or her behavior and to engage in intensively supervised and ambitious tasks intended to bring about change. Successful completion of the Drug Court program can result in vacating a juvenile's adjudication or plea on the drug offense and dismissal of the petition(s).

Drug Court cases are heard by a Magistrate.

Truancy Court

The Truancy Court is a community and school based intervention program.

The Truancy Court assigns a Magistrate to initially hear cases at a local high school or middle school on a weekly basis. Both parents and truants are summoned before the court which, after a hearing, recommends appropriate intervention measures. The Truancy Court supervises cases on a continuing basis until truancy is no longer an issue.

Domestic Violence Court

The mission of the Domestic Violence Court is to effectively manage a specialized domestic abuse docket within the overall framework of affording protective orders and services to victims and their families while at the same time ensuring the batterer's accountability and encouraging behavior changes.

Court Appointed Special Advocate (CASA)

The Court Appointed Special Advocate Program (CASA) was initiated in 1978 by the Family Court. The program trains volunteer advocates who work with full-time staff attorneys and social workers as a team to represent the best interests of dependent, neglected, and abused children under the jurisdiction of the Family Court.

CASA volunteers investigate the circumstances surrounding a case to which they are assigned by conducting home visits and contacting other service providers involved in the case. The volunteers provide ongoing advocacy for the child and submit written reports to the Family Court with recommendations as to the best interests of the child.

Media Guidelines

Juvenile Proceedings

Family Court Associate Justices conduct trials for juvenile offenders using many of the same procedures Superior Court Associate Justices use in trials for adults. However, in Family Court, the trials and hearings are closed to the public.

Confidentiality

The media may request to cover juvenile proceedings and it is up to the judge's discretion whether to grant permission. However, even with permission, a juvenile's name must be kept confidential.

The law requires the news media not to publish a juvenile's name. All police records relating to arrests, detention, and the disposition of juvenile cases are withheld from public inspection.

The disposition of a case or any evidence given in Family Court is not admissible as evidence against the child in any proceeding in any other court. A judicial finding that a child is wayward or delinquent is not considered a conviction in Rhode Island. The juvenile offender is not deemed to have a criminal record.

Court Structure

The Chief Judge of the District Court is responsible for assigning judges, appointing an administrator and establishing calendars in District Court.

The Chief Judge is assisted by thirteen Associate Judges and two Magistrates.

Responsibilities/Process

Most people appearing before a court in Rhode Island initially appear in District Court, which has four different geographic locations around the state - Providence, Warwick, Newport, and Wakefield.

All criminal misdemeanor cases are tried in the District Court if the defendant waives his right to a jury trial. If the defendant asks for a jury trial, the case will be transferred to the Superior Court. The District Court also has jurisdiction over bail hearings in felony cases and over violation hearings in misdemeanor cases.

The District Court presides over civil trials in which the damages sought total up to $5,000. If the parties agree, the District Court can hear civil suits for damages to a maximum of $10,000.

Appeals from District Court decisions go to the Superior Court for a trial de novo.

District Court Jurisdiction also Includes:

- ✦ Small Claims Court for damages up to to $2,500.
- ✦ Violations of municipal ordinances and regulations.
- ✦ Violations and hearings on involuntary hospitalization under the mental-health, drug-abuse, and alcohol laws.
- ✦ Appeals from, and compliance with, subpoenas and rulings of the state tax administrator and several regulatory agencies and boards.
- ✦ Violations of state and local housing codes except when a municipal court has been established to handle these matters. Decisions in these areas are subject to review by the Supreme Court only.

The Chief Judge of the Workers' Compensation Court is the administrative chief of the court and is responsible for assigning judges and establishing the calendars in the Workers' Compensation Court. There are nine Associate Judges serving on the court.

Responsibilities

Workers' Compensation Court has jurisdiction over all disputes between an employer and an employee relating to workers' compensation. The Workers' Compensation Court deals with more than 8,000 petitions each year. More than 70% of the disputes are resolved within one month of the date on which they are filed.

The court's jurisdiction includes contested cases involving the rehabilitation of injured employees and claims involving disputes between an employer and its workers' compensation insurer.

Since July 1, 1989, the expenses incurred in the operation of the court are paid through the Workers' Compensation's Administrative Fund.

Process

The basic procedure utilized by the court to address the majority of the claims filed does not vary significantly. Pursuant to the provisions of G.L. 1956 § 28-35-20, the court must conduct a pretrial conference within twenty-one days of the date on which a petition is filed. The initial purpose of the pretrial conference is to attempt to find common ground between the parties to settle the dispute. However, if the matter cannot be resolved, the Associate Judge conducting the pretrial conference will enter a pretrial order addressing the relief sought. This order is effective upon entry and requires immediate compliance. If the parties are dissatisfied with the court's order, they may appeal the matter to the Appellate Division. However, the pretrial order remains binding during the time the trial is ongoing.

Either party has the right to appeal a pretrial order simply by filing a claim for trial within five days. The trial judge can then assign the matter to initial hearing. The initial hearing serves two purposes. First, the court can use the initial hearing to reduce the issues in dispute to a minimum. Uncontested issues can be addressed by stipulation. Second, the initial hearing serves as an ideal scheduling tool. The court can determine the names of the witnesses who will appear and the length of time required for testimony. This allows the court to schedule these matters in the most efficient manner possible and helps to reduce the number of continuances to a minimum.

When the matter is reached for trial, the court conducts a full evidentiary hearing on all the issues raised in the petitions. The trial is a matter of record and the court follows the Rhode Island Rules of Evidence. Following the close of evidence, the trial judge renders a decision. A decree containing the court's findings of fact and orders is entered.

The Workers' Compensation Court is also charged with conducting an intermediate review of any decision which is appealed after a full trial on the merits. Pursuant to G.L. 1956 § 28-35-28, the initial appeal from a trial judge's decree is to the Appellate Division of the Workers' Compensation Court. The Chief Judge of the court is required to appoint appellate panels to hear these appeals.

The Appellate Division will review the record of the proceedings conducted before the trial judge and evaluate all the legal and factual issues presented. The Appellate Panels must then issue a decision and decree which will affirm, reverse, or modify the trial court's order. However, great deference is given to the findings of fact made at the trial level and the Appellate Division will review contested factual issues only where it first decides that the trial judge's findings were clearly erroneous. Appeals from the Appellate Division of the Workers' Compensation Court are to the Supreme Court only by a Writ of Certiorari granted by the Supreme Court pursuant to G.L. 1956 § 28-35-29.

Court Structure

The Traffic Tribunal replaced the Administrative Adjudication Court in 1999. Structurally, it is placed under the supervision of the Chief Judge of the District Court. In addition, there are three Associate Judges and four Magistrates. Pursuant to statute, Magistrates will replace the Associate Judges' positions as they become vacant.

Responsibilities

The Traffic Tribunal is responsible for hearing most traffic cases, distributing and controlling traffic summonses, and maintaining accurate driver accident and violation records. The Traffic Tribunal hears appeals from the Division of Motor Vehicles and the municipal courts. The Tribunal has authority to enforce its own judgments.

Process

In order to expedite the disposition of cases, it is the Traffic Tribunal's policy that when a police officer issues a summons for a traffic violation, the officer must designate a date certain for an arraignment. The violating motorist acknowledges receipt of the summons by signing the document. Each department issuing summonses must designate a prosecution officer to be present in court on arraignment day to prosecute violations. At the arraignment, those cases not disposed of are assigned a trial date. There is a no continuance policy. Because the appeals calendar was bogged down with motions to vacate default judgments, a motion calendar has been established to hear motions on Monday, Tuesday, and Thursday afternoons. The three-judge appeals panel, established by law, hears cases on Wednesday afternoons. All appeals from the Traffic Tribunal are heard in the District Court.
